‘Gunman Kills 10 at Buffalo Supermarket in Racist Attack’

On May 14, cycling to Santa Cruz, I stopped at the park in Felton, tilted my face up to drink, at the edge of the grass. A car door shut, a tall, broad-shouldered man in a blue shirt, his skin polished bronze, black hair in a braid down his back, held a bulldog wearing a harness vest, its legs limp, like a marionette’s, unable to carry its weight. “Is he recovering?”

A full-faced, half-sorrowed smile flooded the man’s eyes, crinkled his face like wind wrinkles sand. “No, he’s old, has trouble walking, but loves people, so I bring him to the park. He sits and watches, is happy.”

Children carrying glittered gift bags and balloons streamed by, calling each other, their voices castanets. As the dog was pulling him towards the park’s heart, the man beamed, nodded his goodbye, made the sky bluer, the light sharper.

My country is where the man with the bulldog lives. His smile was sweet, like white grapes when I’m tired and thirsty, warm, like the air at noon after the sun has cleared the coastal fog. I should have learned their names.

The Grand Jury Weighs In

Jurors call for office of tribal affairs, new facilities, more affordable housing

By Thadeus Greenson

thad@northcoastjournal.com

Just a couple weeks after creating a swirl of controversy by releasing a sharply critical report of incumbent Auditor-Controller Karen Paz Dominguez just days before the June 7 election, the Humboldt County Civil Grand Jury quietly dropped three reports in the span of about an hour on June 17.

The reports focus on the topics of elder abuse and housing insecurity for seniors, a look at the county's efforts to comply with state mandates related to Child Welfare Services and the Grand Jury's annual evaluation of county correctional and mental health facilities. The result of months of interviews, investigations and site inspections, the reports include a host of findings and recommendations, urging the county to invest in new facilities, set aside emergency shelter and permanent housing for its growing senior population and create an independent Office of Tribal Affairs to advise county departments and the Board of Supervisors.

Here's a quick look at each report, its findings and recommendations.

Silver Tsunami Warning: Safeguarding Our Seniors

Humboldt County's current population is about 136,000 and about 18 percent of them — 25,000 — are seniors. But the Grand Jury warns Humboldt County's senior population is slated to increase 36 percent — spiking to 34,000 — by 2030, as more and more baby boomers turn 65 daily. How, the report asks, is Humboldt County going to prepare?

"Humboldt County is a great place to retire, if you have good health, a home to live in, medical insurance, a social safety net and people that care about you," the report opens. "But what if you do not have all of the things listed above?"

The Grand Jury's investigation began with a complaint from a senior who was confused and frustrated by the county's elder abuse reporting process and the response his report drew from local law enforcement. The investigation then "took a surprising turn" when a social worker suggested to the jury that homelessness is a "form of elder abuse," prompting the Grand Jury to pivot to looking into housing insecurity among seniors, as well.

On the elder abuse reporting front, the Grand Jury agreed with the senior that methods for reporting the physical, sexual, emotional and financial abuse, as well as neglect, of elders in Humboldt County is needlessly complex. During June — Elder Abuse Awareness Month — public service announcements about elder abuse reporting flood the air waves and show up in advertisements, the report states, but "when the month is over, the information becomes hard to find," especially for a demographic that may not have smart phones or be well versed in navigating the internet. As such, the Grand Jury recommends Adult Protective Services, local law enforcement agencies and the district attorney coordinate with all local media on a strategy for year-round public service announcements and articles discussing various aspects of elder abuse and how to report it.

(If you or someone you know may be a victim of elder abuse, the Grand Jury urges you to contact Humboldt County Adult Protective Services at 476-2100 or (866) 527-8614, or, if the issue is life-threatening, to call 911.)

While the Grand Jury indicates it believes elder abuse is an under-reported crime locally, it did take a moment to applaud the work of District Attorney Maggie Fleming, who created the Elder and Vulnerable Adult Services Team using Measure Z funding. Between 2017 and 2021, the team pursued 103 elder abuse prosecutions, garnering 41 felony convictions, as well as 20 convictions on lesser charges, whereas in 2016, a year prior to the team's formation, no local elder abuse cases were referred for prosecution.

"This is a substantial improvement," the report states, urging District Attorney-elect Stacey Eads to maintain the program.

While there are a host of services available to local seniors, the Grand Jury warns that housing insecurity is growing in the senior population, saying multiple governmental agencies and nonprofits alerted it to the "ever-increasing number of homeless seniors they now regularly serve." Currently, the report states there are no local emergency beds or shelters set aside exclusively for seniors, noting that many local seniors feel unsafe at other shelters and avoid them.

"To meet those concerns, local service providers should prioritize providing a dedicated space within their shelters with increased security and senior-friendly accommodations," the report states. "In addition, local service providers should seek additional training in geriatrics to better serve seniors."

But emergency shelters should be the last resort, and the Grand Jury states plainly that now is the time for the county to maximize its efforts and leverage "extraordinary" and "plentiful" state grant opportunities to build more affordable housing.

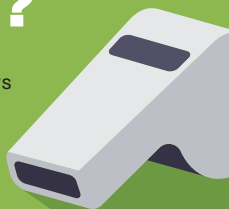

"The Grand Jury believes the best way to ensure seniors remain housed is to create enough affordable housing for everyone and to ensure that enough housing, both emergency and permanent, is set aside for seniors," the report states. "At this point, with a 1,000-plus wait list for all affordable permanent housing in Humboldt County, seniors do not have time for another task force, housing study or years-long affordable housing wait list.”

Collaborative Community Quest

A 2015 investigation by the California Attorney General's Office into reports that the Humboldt County Department of Health and Human Services (DHHS), Child Welfare Services (CWS) and Humboldt County Sheriff's Office were failing to comply with state child abuse reporting laws led to a judgment against the county and a binding memorandum of understanding between the agencies and the state. The Grand Jury decided to follow up to see how the ensuing four-year process, which included state monitoring, to see what's changed, with a particular focus on tribal collaboration.

“We have determined that while DHHS-CWS and HCSO have made notable progress toward collaboration with area Native American tribes, this mandated corrective action continues to be a challenge in the areas of joint decision making, cross-reporting, communication involving child welfare policies, and oft-opposing philosophical perspectives,” the report states.

The report states that compliance monitors have “noted Humboldt County's considerable struggle to achieve tribal collaboration.” While progress has been made, according to the Grand Jury, a gap in understanding remains, in part due to distrust created by generational trauma and a still-limited understanding of tribal communities' values and culture.

In response, the Grand Jury recommends the county create an Office of Tribal Affairs that would advise the Board of Supervisors and county departments on matters of importance to local tribal governments and tribal citizens.

“Tribal representatives expressed to the Grand Jury their communities' greatest assets are their children, land and sovereignty,” the report states. “Universal support for and understanding of their perspective is needed.”

Custody Corrections and Other County Facilities

As a part of its annual mandate, the Grand Jury inspects the county jail and the Eel River Conservation Camp, and this year took on inspecting the juvenile hall, animal shelter, office of emergency services and Sempervirens Psychiatric Health Facility, among others.

Overall, the Grand Jury found the facilities in need of some TLC and investment, or outright replacement.

“It was evident to the Grand Jury that staff [at the facilities] were motivated, hard-working and passionate about successful outcomes for their programs and our community,” the report states, before looking at the facilities themselves. “The Grand Jury noted peeling paint, ceiling leaks, deteriorating stairways and damaged ceiling tiles at several facilities. ... The Grand Jury finds these significant concerns: deferred maintenance; substandard facilities resulting in safety and functional issues; and mental health and substance use disorders which overwhelm our systems.”

The Grand Jury calls on the sheriff's office, DHHS and local healthcare providers to form a comprehensive action plan that works to address the flow of illicit drugs into the county, provides services for users, especially those experiencing serious mental health issues, and examine the stigma associated with seeking “behavioral health and treatment services.”

The county should move forward with plans to build a step-down housing facility that helps patients transition out of Sempervirens, the Grand Jury recommends, while also working “immediately” to replace Sempervirens with a “larger, modern facility designed to accommodate both adults and juveniles.”

Repeatedly in this section, the Grand Jury calls for a greater investment in county facilities and it's often unclear where those funds would come from, as the county is operating at a budget deficit that's projected to grow to more than $20 million in 2024-2025. Staffing, the Grand Jury notes, also remains a significant issue.

“There are multiple vacant positions,” the report states. “To attract new employees, affordable housing must be available for individuals and families. Without sufficient housing, jobs will be unfilled in numerous critical areas of the county.”

Prison Rehab: Can California Learn from Norway?

California has a recidivism problem.

Two-thirds of people incarcerated in the state will return to prison within three years, either through new offenses or parole violations, according to California Department of Corrections and Rehabilitation data.

In Norway, by contrast, recidivism is down from 60 to 70 percent in the 1980s to about 20 percent today. The country credits the change to reforms that prioritize rehabilitation over punishment — and to its guiding question on prison policy: When prisoners are released, what kind of neighbor does society want them to be?

Prisons in Norway and parts of Western Europe deemphasize the institutional aspects of incarcerated life. Prisoners get to wear their own clothes, cook their own food and have relative freedom of movement within the prison walls.

Democratic Assemblymember Carlos Villapudua of Stockton read about the Norwegian model last year and offered up a scaled-down version this year for California.

The bill, Assembly Bill 2730, passed unanimously and now heads to the Senate, with the support of both prison reform advocates and the union representing prison guards.

The idea is that prisoners with two years or less left on their sentences would be chosen by the warden and moved into a campus on prison grounds where they would cook their own food, do their own laundry and make their own beds. And most importantly to Villapudua, they would get job training in areas that need more workers.

For Villapudua's district, that means training truck drivers to combat a shortage of truckers willing to take on long-haul routes. For some inmates, that means getting a Class A driver's license to drive big rigs before they are released.

"That way, by the time they get out, they already have their Class A license and they know who their bosses are," Villapudua said. "That's how much a desperate need this field has.

"Their first week, maybe even before they get out, they may have a paycheck because (trucking companies) now have signing bonuses."

Villapudua said he's helped four formerly incarcerated people get Class A licenses and connected them with employers, for jobs he said pay more than $80,000. But the process, he said, is backward.

Instead of waiting for people to be released, facing their first days outside a prison trying to find employment, Villapudua said it makes more sense to use their last two years inside for job training.

The idea of a more communal model for U.S. prisons has started to take hold in several states, part of a long-running effort by the California-based Prison Law Project to fly legislators to Norway where they can see the model firsthand.

In North Dakota, about a dozen incarcerated people live in a trailer called the Transitional Housing Unit, living in their own rooms with locking doors. In Connecticut, they're able to take a manufacturing course at a local community college. In Idaho, the Marshall Project reported, a prisoner, a guard and their families went fishing together.

"Can we snap our fingers and turn California prisons into Norway? No," said Sharon Dolovich, director of the University of California at Los Angeles Prison Law and Policy Program. "But this is an urgently needed step to transform the experience of incarceration into what it's actually supposed to represent."

Despite Norway's success around recidivism, the prison system there came to international attention in the last decade for a different reason: Anders Breivik, the man who killed 77 people in bomb and gun attacks in 2011, alleged in a 2016 lawsuit that he was being mistreated.

That's when most people learned about his accommodations: Three separate cells, access to video games and the freedom to cook his own food. According to the BBC, he built a gingerbread house as part of a prison competition.

That's not quite what Villapudua said he envisions in California.

"People always think reform is a bad word," Villapudua said. "The key is to separate folks who know they made a mistake and know they're going to be normal citizens again, not being in there faking it. If you fake it, you go back to general population."

The bill passed unanimously in the Assembly public safety and appropriations committees, and again on the Assembly floor in May.

It doesn't come with money attached, so if passed and signed by the governor, the California prison system would have to pay for it within its own budget, which is $14.2 billion in 2022-2023.

No specific conviction would disqualify inmates from participation, something Dolovich said is an important aspect of the bill that allows for a much wider spectrum of inmates to participate.

Villapudua said he deliberately left the program open to everyone, not just the "non-non-nons," a colloquial phrase indicating inmate with sentences that are non-violent, non-serious and non-sexual.

"Everybody's so ready to exclude the very people we're trying to help," Dolovich said. "Who are these elusive non-non-nons?"

Not all the details are hammered out, Villapudua said, and questions remain. Would inmates leave the prison to work in the outside world? Can they get jobs as dockworkers at ports, which require background checks?

In a letter of support to the Legislature, California Correctional Peace Officers Association lobbyist Matthew Easley wrote that the bill would be an improvement over vocational programs offered today. In his letter, he derided existing programs as often having "no correlation to the needs of the communities to which inmates will be released" and failing to prepare them for employment.

And, he said, the community setting would help prisoners who want rehabilitation by separating them from prisoners who don't.

"Even with the appropriate motivations and intentions, the pressures found from fellow inmates can be too great to keep to the straight and narrow," Easley wrote on May 23. "Prison politics can often be inescapable when programs and housing are delivered in the same environment as those who have no intention of improving themselves."

Prey-go-neesh returns to Yurok Country

By Kimberly Wear kim@northcoastjournal.com

On March 25, a California condor landed on the North Coast.

Unlike his predecessors, the bird known as No. 746 didn't travel on thermals, using his massive, nearly 10-foot wingspan to soar across the landscape. Instead, the 7-year-old adult male came by plane from an Idaho breeding facility to mentor a new generation of condors as part of a Yurok Tribe-led program to return the endangered species to the northern reaches of its former territory.

For Yurok Tribe Wildlife Department Director Tiana Williams-Claussen, his arrival was profound in ways that even surprised her.

"I think we'd all been looking forward to this day, this event when we bring up these birds that would eventually be released, but it was this mentor bird who first hit me really hard," she says. "He's just a visitor with us, he's not going to be released because he's actually got really important genetics, so he's going to be going back to one of the breeding facilities to contribute once he's done teaching our young whippersnappers how to be down here, but he was literally the first condor to be in Yurok country for over 130 years, which just really struck me."

A Harvard University graduate, Williams-Claussen was just 21 years old and fresh out of college when she returned home to serve her tribe, soon becoming the inaugural member of the department she now heads.

Most of her adult life has been dedicated to fulfilling a council of Yurok elders' wish to bring back the bird they know as prey-go-neesh to once again soar over the tribe's ancestral lands. Now, 14 years later, the moment was here.

As in many Indigenous cultures, the condor is sacred in Yurok tradition. Believed to be among the Earth's first creatures and the one who carries their prayers to the Creator, the bird also joins in the tribe's World Renewal ceremonies to bring balance back to the world through the gift of feathers, which are used in the dancers' regalia.

While No. 746 will never spiral upward into the heavens like his young charges, Williams-Claussen says he's already made his own contribution, dropping the first locally sourced condor feather to be used for Yurok regalia in more than a century.

"As soon as I really saw him settling in, he immediately felt like family, and it felt like a coming home," she says.

A few days later, the moment was brought full circle when the rest of the condors arrived — a female and three males tagged respectively as A0, A1, A2 and A3. Joining in the homecoming were tribal elders, including some who made the original decision to return prey-go-neesh to Yurok lands.

That, Williams-Claussen says, was particularly important to her "because without them, none of this would have even happened."

"I'm so just incredibly grateful to these elders for getting the ball rolling, but they were expressing such gratitude to us for making it happen and that was just a really incredible feeling," she says. "I always say we are doing this for the elders, we are doing this for the children, but to actually see what it meant to these folk to come up and actually see condors for the first time was deeply impactful and really brought home the importance of what I was doing."

As part of the welcoming, one of the elders sang a song from the Yurok Tribe's high ceremonies, blessing the condors' arrival and their future.

"There was this really incredible moment when his song is carrying out over the hillside and all the condors, almost exactly at the same time, spread their wings up and kind of turned toward the sound of his voice and, I don't know, from a scientific perspective it could have been that they were just catching that last bit of stray sun, but from the tribal perspective, it just felt like they were really opening up and welcoming the song that they had been blessed with," Williams-Claussen says.

Yurok Tribal Chair Joseph James, whose mother and grandparents passed down the stories of prey-go-neesh to him, describes the condors' return as a "real life manifestation of our cultural commitment to restore and protect the planet for future generations,” noting the Yurok people “have upheld a sacred responsibility to maintain balance in the natural world” for countless generations.

Seeing the birds for the first time, James says, made him think of the Yurok elders who are no longer here but worked so hard to make this moment a reality.

“It was beautiful, it was exciting ... It felt like healing to have them back at home,” he says.

Not long ago, the California condor was nearly lost to extinction.

Up until March, the last sighting in the North Coast region occurred in 1892. Local populations had been decimated by settlers who poisoned and shot the condors, as well as destroyed habitat and depleted their food supply by overhunting the game and marine mammals on which they depended.

The birds were declared endangered in 1967, with fewer than 100 surviving in the wild. Fewer than two decades later, only 22 remained in a small pocket of mountainous area in Southern California. By 1987, the last of the wild condors were placed into captive breeding programs in a race against time to save the largest bird in North America from extinction.

In the ensuing decades, the overall population slowly increased to include around 500 birds by the end of 2019, with more than half of those in the wild at a scattering of release sites — including Big Sur and Pinnacles — as well as Arizona and Baja California, Mexico.

Now the Yurok-led effort known as the Northern California Condor Restoration Program has joined the fold, with three birds currently flying free and a fourth expected to be released soon.

The first to take flight was A3, a nearly 2-year-old male that has been nicknamed “Poy’-we-son,” which translates in the Yurok language to “the one who goes ahead,” but is also the traditional name for a headman of a village, who helps lead and guide the village in a good way, according to Williams-Claussen.

He was followed shortly after by A2, another male that was given the name “Nes-kwe-chokw,” which translates to “He returns” or “He arrives,” which Williams-Claussen described during the duo’s May 11 release as representative of “the historic moment we just underwent.”

On May 25, the sole female, A0, joined the group, with Williams-Claussen choosing to call her “Ney-gem” ‘Ne-chween-kah,” which she describes as a “heavy name” that means “She carries our prayers.”

The last of this first flock, A1, another young male, is scheduled to make his out-of-enclosure debut next month, delayed by a faulty satellite transmitter that needs to be replaced.

The staggered releases allowed the NC-CRP team — a partnership between the Yurok Tribe, Redwood National and State Parks and other agencies — to monitor how the condors are adjusting to their new surroundings, while also encouraging those now flying free to regularly return to the management and release facility, with the birds still in the enclosure helping to provide a “social draw.”

Chris West, the tribe’s reintroduction program manager who brings decades of experience to the Yurok effort, says there are no specific protocols on exactly when to allow the young birds to take their first flight in the wild.

“It’s hard to nail down what it is we are looking for,” West says, noting it’s more of a “gut” feeling.

Unlike chicks in the wild, many of those born in breeding facilities are separated from their parents at around 10 months, instead of the normal two years. This allows the captive mating pairs to produce an egg annually — one of many methods being employed by the restoration effort to increase the population.

That means this cohort of young condors didn’t get to spend as much time learning the important life skills needed to thrive in the outside world, which is where No. 746 comes in, enacting discipline as needed and teaching them what it means to be a condor, including how to live in a highly social but hierarchical flock.

“He’s pretty tolerant. You want balance in a mentor,” West said, noting there were times he wished No. 746 was a little firmer with the young birds he’d taken under his wings, especially when they strayed from normal behaviors.

Ultimately, the goal of the recovery effort is to allow the condor to build up self-sustaining populations that no longer need to have their numbers boosted by releases from breeding programs and to reach the status West has described as “birds without tags,” living their lives without human intervention.

While the Humboldt County site will hopefully act as a gateway for the birds to branch out into the Pacific Northwest, things here are likely to get off to a slow start, at least on the breeding side.

First of all, none of the birds is ready yet. Late bloomers in the avian world, condors don’t mature until 7 or 8 — yet another obstacle in the species’ ability to rebound — and the young ones being released are still some five years away from adulthood.

And even when that milestone is reached, it will likely take the condors a bit of time to figure out the logistics of mating without any adults around to show them the ropes, West says, likening the situation to the movie Blue Lagoon.

What’s been observed at other new release sites is that eventually one of the pairs will connect the dots and, once it clicks, other pairs will follow suit, he says.

“They don’t have a flock to meld into, so it’s going to be a tough world for them,” West says.

For the foreseeable future, the idea is to keep them returning to the release site perched on the edge of a rolling prairie in Redwood State and National Parks, so they can be monitored and taken in for regular exams to make sure the birds are healthy and their transmitters are functioning.

“That’s part of the reason that the mentor bird is going to be staying with us for a little while, to keep them cued into who they consider to be the dominant bird in their hierarchy right now,” Williams-Claussen says, noting the wildlife team is still providing regular feedings of carrion to those on the outside “to make sure they continue to be supported while they’re figuring out their new landscape.”

All three have already ventured out.

In fact, A3 took off right out of the gate, setting off on a two-week sojourn

Clockwise from right:
The mentor bird opens his wings as A2 sits atop the enclosure.
One of the condors interacts with A0 through the enclosure before her release.

right after his release that included a stop on the Klamath River before finally making his way back to the site.

When he returned into view, A2 took flight to meet him before the two once again settled down amid the protection of the release site, which is encircled in a 1,600-foot electrified fence, measuring some 12-feet tall, to provide the birds additional security from potential predators, including mountain lions, with a small pool for the condors to bathe in.

A June 18 update from NCCRP notes that A2 and A3 have formed a particularly close bond and can often be seen preening, cuddling and roosting together.

Since their release, both have made significant progress in mastering how “to read the wind and adjust their bodies to capture and use the air to their advantage,” according to NCCRP team.

“As they get older and more familiar with the region, they will fly off for weeks to months at a time, so we’re all enjoying this time that we have to watch them so closely,” the update states.

A0, however, is having a more difficult time, sticking close to the release site initially. Consequently, she hadn’t honed her flying skills before setting out and had been gone for more than a week as of June 20.

The update states satellite data from A0’s transmitter shows she’s in a very remote area that’s difficult for the NCCRP team to access to visually assess how she’s doing.

“Remember that condors are large soaring birds that don’t flap their wings very much when they fly,” the updates states. “Because of this, it takes considerable time after release (or fledge) to learn how to remain aloft and be controlled in flight.”

Each release site has to go through this same period, Williams-Claussen says, sending birds out into an environment devoid of condors to set the stage for those that will follow.

Come late summer or early fall, these trailblazers will be joined by a new batch of captive-raised fledglings, a process that will be repeated each year for at least the next two decades.

“We’re going to want them to interact with the new birds coming in, both for the new cohort and for the now older birds’ sake, so they can start forming a cohesive unit together and the young ones can watch how the wild birds are acting and interacting as well," Williams-Claussen says.

Getting to this point has already been a long road, with the tribe reaching out to local landowners — both public and private — as well as federal and state agencies, including U.S. Fish and Wildlife, which leads the California Condor Recovery Project with more than a dozen partners, to establish a collaborative effort.

The Yurok Tribe's wildlife team also spent more than a decade laying the groundwork for the birds' return by mapping potential habitat, working to educate hunters about non-lead ammunition options and trapping fellow scavengers — turkey vultures and ravens — to test their blood for lead exposure from tainted carrion, which is the single greatest threat to condors' survival in the wild.

Other prep work included the sampling of marine mammals to check for toxins that could impede the flocks' success.

Known as the clean-up crew of the wild, condors play an important role in the ecosystem as apex scavengers that use their powerful beaks to pierce the tough skins of dead animals ranging from elk to sea lions and even the occasional whale, clearing the large carcasses from the landscape and helping to prevent the spread of disease.

"It's been a 14-year journey ... with a lot of successes, a lot of pitfalls, a lot of people coming together to overcome complexities in order to bring condors back in an integrated way that will benefit the species but also benefit the region," Williams-Claussen says.

As a tribal member, she says, a number of things stand out.

"One is that this ... is a good example of how the Yurok Tribe is taking back the power and authority to be caretakers of the landscape," Williams-Claussen says. "We've always maintained that responsibility and obligation, but it's hard to do when your lands have been taken away from you."

Another, she says, has been her ability to learn more about what it means to be a World Renewal person by working with the tribe's elders and the community, as well as what it means to be a part of such a large conservation effort that "has been going on for decades and decades, of course, with innumerable partners coming together to make it happen."

"And, just as a final tap on that," Williams-Claussen continues, "I myself have grown and learned from my opportunity to work with my elders on this, which has brought healing to me and my family. But then it's also something I'm passing on to my daughter, who just turned 4 and who loves condors in a way I didn't even know to love condors when I was a kid because they had been absent so long. And they are just a natural part of her life now, so that's been really impactful to me as well."

But sending condors out into the larger world comes with inherent risk — mainly from man-made threats, including lead poisoning and electrocution by power poles. Asked if it was hard not to become attached to the birds, Williams-Claussen says it's already too late.

"On the one hand, you kind of want to tell yourself not to because, unfortunately, condor mortality is very high in the wild and it's fully expected that we're going to be losing some of our birds," she says. "But on the other hand, it's impossible not to be attached, especially after waiting for them for so long."

She notes that this project has been in the works for 14 years and "our region has been waiting for condors to come back for 130." Any losses, she says, are "something we are going to have to navigate."

"Personally, I want to maintain that attachment," Williams-Claussen says. "I think that's what is needed to ... help them thrive, to bring the world back into balance in a way so that it can support them again, which is not where we are right now. But it takes that attachment, it takes that love and that drive of not just us but everybody that's committed to condor restoration to make things really happen."

"So I think it's going to end up hurting but it's incredibly important to have that attachment anyway," she says. ●

Stuffed Wild Morels

Local bounty for a Chinese-style delicacy

By Wendy Chan

onthetable@northcoastjournal.com

Spring is here and seasonal mushrooms are popping up everywhere, including morels, some of my favorites. I first tried these tasty mushrooms not too long ago. Once I found out how pricey they could be, I knew why I had never heard of them before. I had to look up what they're called in Chinese: "lamb tripe" because of their crinkly appearance. A friend of mine who dislikes lamb even thinks morels smell like lamb. Well, more for me! I absolutely love the texture and flavor, and have learned a lot about its health benefits. These meaty, earthy, sweet and nutty wonders of nature contain the highest amount of vitamin D among edible mushrooms. They are rich in potassium, zinc and iron. Many Chinese people believe it helps with digestion, strengthens the immune system, combats fatigue and improves quality of sleep.

We are lucky to live on the North Coast, where morels grow in abundance. During the spring, you can find them at the North Coast Co-op stores and farmers markets, call your mushroom hunter friends or go out and forage them yourself. This season seems like bountiful one. I managed to get morels a few times at the local stores in May. Then last week my friend foraged some beautiful high mountain black morels for us. I made a variety of dishes out of them: putting them in soup with chicken and Chinese herbs, stir frying them with garden vegetables, cooking them with braised beef and stuffing them with pork and shrimp. I also dried some.

The stuffed morels here are appealing for a dinner gathering. They are truly delicious, healthy, fresh and light. The recipe is simple to make at home. The recipe is versatile, too, and by substituting tamari for the soy sauce, can be made gluten free. If you have a favorite vegetarian or vegan dumpling stuffing, you can swap it in for the meat filling and use the same cooking method.

Steamed Stuffed Morels

Ingredients

8 to 10 large fresh morels

For the filling:

½ pound shrimp, finely chopped
 ½ pound ground pork
 1 teaspoon minced ginger
 ¼ cup green onion, white parts only, thinly sliced
 1 tablespoon oyster sauce
 1 teaspoon soy sauce
 ½ teaspoon white pepper
 1 teaspoon cornstarch
 ½ teaspoon salt
 1 tablespoon sugar

For the sauce:

1 tablespoon cornstarch
 1 teaspoon oyster sauce
 ¾ cup liquid from steaming the mushrooms
 Green onion, chopped for garnish

Halve the mushrooms, clean and drain them well in a colander before patting gently with a paper towel.

Place all the filling ingredients in a bowl and mix them well with your hands.

Cover the bowl and place it in the refrigerator for half an hour or more to allow the flavors to meld.

When you're ready to steam, stuff each morel half with 2 teaspoons of filling or as much as the mushroom will hold. Place the morels on a heatproof plate, arranging them spaced apart. Position a wire rack or a pair of wooden chopsticks at the bottom of a pot and add 1 cup of water to the bottom of the pot and place the plate with mushrooms inside. Bring the pot to a boil, then cover and steam the mushrooms for 12 to 15 minutes.

Remove the mushrooms from the pot and arrange them on a serving plate, reserving the liquid from the steaming plate.

In a small sauce pan, make the sauce. Carefully pour the liquid from the steaming plate, about ¾ cup, into the sauce pan. In a saucer, combine 1 teaspoon of oyster sauce and 1 tablespoon of cornstarch, mixing well before adding it to the cooking liquid. Cook over low heat, stirring until it thickens to a silky sauce. Pour the sauce over the mushrooms and garnish with the green onions. Serve with rice.

Exploring the Lanphere Dunes

By Louisa Rogers

getout@northcoastjournal.com

I would never have guessed that back in the 1930s, the entire Cal Poly Humboldt faculty (then Humboldt State College) could fit into one house for dinner.

This was one of many bits of trivia I learned on a Friends of the Dune guided tour of Lanphere Dunes earlier this spring. Thirteen of us assembled at 10 a.m. on a Saturday at the Pacific Union School in Arcata to carpool to the private Lanphere Dunes, located north of Ma-le'l Dunes.

"The first part of our walk is the hardest," warned our veteran guide, John St. Marie, who has held every role imaginable in the FOD organization since 1988. Sure enough, I had to grab onto the ropes on either side of the short but steep and slippery path. When we reached the sandy flatland above, we listened to St. Marie describe how the Lanphere Dunes include not just dunes, but also wetlands, subtidal channels, mud flats, conifer forest, marshes, part of the Mad River Slough and beach. At this latitude, southern and northern dune plants overlap, creating a rare mix of vegetation. While the wind whipped around us, we headed off to check out the freshwater skunk cabbage, spruce, red alder, ground nesting bees and invasive European beach grass.

John was a fount of knowledge, stopping every so often to describe a particular plant, such as the native Chilean or beach strawberry. In 1712, French cartographer and spy Amédée-François Frézier, stationed in Chile, brought beach strawberry plants back to France, where they were bred with the woodland strawberry, thus introducing the "New World" fruit to the "Old World." (His last name is where the French word for strawberry, fraise, derives.)

Later he stopped to show us a midden. "Remember, we are not the first ones. We are walking on unceded Wiyot land," John said, explaining how the Wiyot transferred food in woven baskets to hot rocks in order to cook it. Bits of cooking stones are still strewn about. Later I learned that the Friends of the Dunes is working in partnership with the Wiyot Tribe to pursue opportunities to return land to the tribe.

Descending the steps into a lush, green portion of the Lanphere Dunes.

In 1936, Bill and Hortense Lanphere, a couple who were biology and fisheries professors, respectively, moved to Arcata from Seattle so Bill could teach biology at then Humboldt State College. They bought the 550-acre dunes property and used it for bringing students on to the land for research and education, a tradition that continues to this day. In her memoir Bedlam on the Dunes, Hortense described how they had to use the kitchen stove to heat water for a bath. The stove held two sticks at a time, which heated enough water for only one bath by bedtime, so she and Bill had to toss a coin as to who went first. The Lanpheres didn't get around to buying a fridge because it never got hot enough. At night, they read until 10 p.m., "ate a goose-liver sandwich, drank a bottle of Olympia beer, and then went to sleep." The house is still visible in the distance from the dunes.

Hortense, a professor of fisheries, was known as the "pistol-packin mama" because of her fierce protection of the dunes. In the 1970s when dune buggies became popular, she would carry her pistol and occasionally fire warning shots to anyone that trespassed. Once she was brought before a judge to respond to complaints by riders.

The Lanpheres maintained the dunes in a relatively pristine state until the '70s, when they sold it to the Nature Conservancy. It is now part of the National Wildlife Refuge System. At 32 miles, stretching from Moonstone Beach to Centerville, Humboldt County has the longest continuous coastal dunes in the state.

In January of 2021, 900 acres of Lanphere Dunes and Ma-le'l Dunes, the first dune habitat restoration project on the West Coast, were designated as National Natural Landmarks by the U.S. Department of the Interior. According to the Friends of the Dunes newsletter The Dunesberry, the organization is in the preliminary stages of bringing together the stakeholders of the protected lands around Humboldt Bay to create a new Wigi-Humboldt Bay and Dunes National Monument. Owned by different landowners, these conservation properties are often contiguous or connected by the waters of the bay, sharing the same wildlife, rare native plants, trails, Wiyot heritage and cultural significance, as well as challenges (such as invasive species, climate change and sea level rise). Under the new national monument framework, no partners would lose ownership of their land or any autonomy, and they would be able to attract more resources to address challenges and work more cohesively towards common goals.

Not enough detail for you? Try spending a morning soaking up not only fresh marine air and natural beauty, but also a store of botanical and historical information. You can sign up for one of the monthly half-day, free guided walks around Lanphere Dunes at www.friendsofthedunes.org. ●

Windy Conditions Slow Pacific Halibut Bite

By Kenny Priest
fishing@northcoastjournal.com

Halibut continues to be the focal point out of both Eureka and Trinidad after another week of sizzling action. Eureka charter and sport boats fishing a few miles on each side of the entrance in 250 to 300 feet of water reported quick limits. The Trinidad boats have done equally as good straight out of the harbor. And it's looking like the only thing that will slow down the onslaught is if you can't get to the fishing grounds. And that's exactly what happened when the wind picked up Sunday. But that could be a blessing in disguise. The 38,740-pound quota has the potential to get chewed up quickly with the fleet consistently putting halibut in the box. Best case scenario would be for the quota to last at least through July when the salmon season opens back up Aug. 1. And the way our weather pattern is shaping up, the wind may just see to it. Through June 12, the California Department of Fish and Wildlife has projected 5,473 pounds have been caught. To track the quota, visit <https://wildlife.ca.gov/Conservation/Marine/Pacific-Halibut#31670772-in-season-tracking>.

Weekend marine forecast

Gusty conditions will be prevalent throughout the week, but should improve by the weekend. As of Tuesday afternoon, Friday's forecast is calling for north winds 5 to 15 knots and waves northwest 7 feet at nine seconds. Saturday's forecast is calling for northwest winds 5 to 10 knots and waves northwest 6 feet at eight seconds. The winds will decrease Sunday, coming from the northwest up to 5 knots. Waves will be northwest 4 feet at seven seconds. These conditions can and will change by the weekend. For an up-to-date weather forecast, visit www.weather.gov/eureka/ or www.windy.com. You can also call the National Weather Service at 443-7062 or the office on Woodley Island at 443-6484.

Freshwater Lagoon trout plants

According to the California Department of Fish and Wildlife website, Freshwater Lagoon has been planted with trout almost weekly since early May. Reportedly, the fishing has been excellent this month for keeper-sized rainbows. Freshwater is open to fishing year-round and the limit is 5 trout per day and 10 in possession. For more information, visit www.nrm.dfg.ca.gov/Fish-Plants or call (530) 225-2146.

The Oceans:

Eureka

The boats left the Pacific halibut biting Saturday after being chased off the water due to the forecast of high winds and rough seas. And those conditions will continue through at least Thursday. According to Tim Klassen of Reel Steel Sport Fishing, the Pacific halibut bite is still really good. "The fish are a little better grade this year, we're seeing a lot of them in the 30-to-50-pound range," said Klassen. "Boats are still having to deal with black cod, but if you can keep a bait on the bottom, your chances of catching a halibut are good. Cape Mendocino is providing excellent rockfish action as usual. There's lots of variety, you can catch 8 to 10 different species on any given day. The ling cod bite isn't as wide-open, but you can get limits if you put in the time."

Trinidad

Rough water kept the charter boats close to port the last few days, but conditions should improve towards the end of the week. Curt Wilson of Wind Rose Charters reports the Pacific halibut bite is still raging. "Limits are pretty much the norm, with most coming straight out in roughly 250 feet of water," said Wilson. "The rockfish bite continues to be really good, with lots of black rockfish being caught. The ling bite has also picked back up. The crabbing slowed down over the weekend," added Wilson. Dungeness crab season using hoop nets and crab snares is open through July 30.

Shelter Cove

"Salmon fishing is still very slow with only a handful caught this week," said Jake Mitchell of Sea Hawk Sport Fishing. "There isn't much bait around and the water is clear blue in every direction. The rockfish bite is consistently good with limits the norm. The Hat and Ranch House are two of the better spots. I only heard of a couple halibut caught this week."

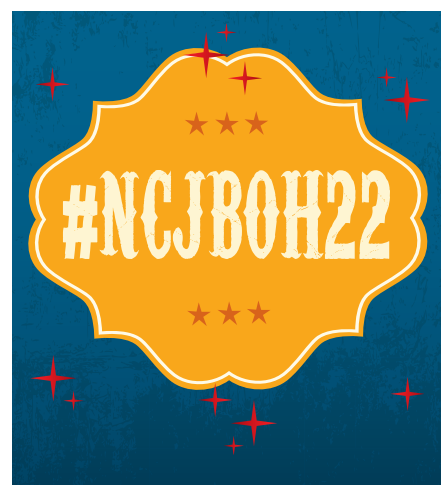

Crescent City

"When the boats can get out, which hasn't been the case the last few days, there are Pacific halibut to be had," said Britt Carson of Crescent City's England Marine. "Most boats are fishing the South Reef in roughly 250 feet of water. Quite a few were caught last week, with fish all the way to 40 pounds. The rockfish action is still red-hot, with easy limits coming to those who put in the time. And you don't need to go far, especially if it's rough. There's plenty of good spots outside the harbor going towards Castle Rock. A few more California halibut were caught this week. Some of the guys trolling South Beach who know what they're doing are catching a few."

Art Outside-in on the Bluff

The second annual Outer Roominations

By L. L. Kessner

artbeat@northcoastjournal.com

It was raining lightly and a little windy when I arrived with a friend at Outer Roominations for the third and final day of this year's site-specific installation and performance festival on the Bluff in Loleta. The weather didn't detract from the playful and enthusiastic atmosphere of the event, for which more than 30 local artists labored to construct immersive, intentionally ephemeral artworks and appreciate the wild outdoors of Humboldt County.

This was Outer Roominations' second year on the Bluff and Leslie Castellano states the first event was birthed from conversations between the organizers about a need to find creative ways for people to safely come together, even with the continuing pandemic. Presented by Synapsis, a Dreamaker project of the Ink People, with a grant from the McLean Foundation, "Outer Roominations invites people to wonder about the world and to see what might be possible in their environments and in their communities differently," explains Castellano. "There is a window or door or room to enter into a shared space where the everyday meets with the fantastic. Through the event, we also celebrate and pay artists for their contributions, valuing their labor and knowing that art and culture invite new opportunities for sensing and being together in the world."

My friend and I slipped and slid a little in our boots, and I reflected on the feat of carving trails and little rooms into this rugged landscape. Outer Roominations was not a gallery display strategy transported outside, but rather an activation through art of a natural context with its own very large personality. The walking paths directed event-goers so some installations felt as though they existed in their own private spaces. In contrast with the bombastic spectacle of many art installations of the moment, Outer Roominations felt intimate, sometimes subtle and even contemplative. Since the artworks were only intended to be in the landscape for the weekend, many were not built for the elements. The inevitability of their disintegration, should they be left just a little longer, made them operate on my mind like vanitas still lifes. I was aware of their fragility and that the landscape was in charge.

Many participating artists landed on similar solutions for working with the environment: material dangling from branches, assemblages of found objects and objects d'art, and DIY craft constructions, which resulted in a fairly unified aesthetic throughout. There were exceptions, however. One visual standout was a metal sphere by Lucas Thornton that, despite being a direct analog to steel garden balls one can order from Home Depot, somehow transformed its surroundings into an other-worldly, vaguely mystical fairy or crop circle. Sitting in this context, in a natural ring of slightly taller grass and wildflowers in a field, it became a fragment of some mysterious, future technology.

Installation art aims to put the viewer within the work, which was surely happening at Outer Roominations. For me, though, the overall effect was closer to the intentions of some minimalist works, specifically the plain cubes in museums that many people love to hate. Those works, more playful than is sometimes acknowledged, make the movement of the viewers around them the art. Many of the works in Outer Roominations pointed my attention in a similar way to what was going on around them. Not being in the neutral, white cube of the gallery, the action around the objects was not just that of the viewers; it was the action of the environment. Land art in general does this but much of it draws attention to space, whereas here I attended to the living land and plants and weather.

On our way out of the event space, I wandered up to a tree with a sign that invited me to enjoy a ride on a swinging loveseat and to write a love letter. The love seat, hanging with ratchet straps from a sturdy branch, was wrapped tightly in plastic tarps to protect it from the rain, which had recently subsided. I realized I'd never actually written a love letter and considered. I've found I tend to benefit whenever I un-coolly set aside my reservations and just do what is suggested. So, I took this opportunity to sit on a wooden stool I found behind a tree (definitely not there for this purpose) and write a sincere, open and very real love letter. In doing so, I thought of things that would almost certainly not have been on my mind that afternoon. And the experience was nothing short of cathartic.

I imagine nearly all the installations at Outer Roominations held the potential to lead a viewer/participant into a similarly profound, personal and otherwise unprompted experience. And that, to me, is what the whole thing is about. As I finished up my letter, the artist Gretchen Schuster, who'd created the installation, strode down to the trail to remove the rain shield from her love seat. My friend and I and two other visitors, strangers to us, then took turns swinging and pushing one another through the air on the suspended sofa.

One of my favorite sounds is the soft rustle of a breeze through the leaves of a tree. I'm talking about broad leaves here, like a maple tree, not the evergreens that tend to populate our forests, and whose branches creak and groan in the wind like the ghosts of old washerwomen attending to the laundry. This is a summertime sound when the breezes are low and mild, and the deciduous trees are greenest. Some of my finest memories are tied to this gentle soundtrack, basking in the sun of expired afternoons while the rest of the world hums, crackles and explodes far out of earshot.

What I'm trying to say is that I'm a cheap date, particularly in the summer when my calendar oscillates between large spectacles and quiet reveries. The former is happening on Saturday in Arcata's Creamery District, and I am sure that I will glide through to down a few of my favorite shellfish like a carefree and scavenging walrus on a bright Arctic day. I'll probably do my best to avoid the thick of the crowds and am looking forward to the margins of the weekend, where a lot of great shows are going down. Let's explore, shall we?

Thursday

Minneapolis has always been a Mid-western enigma: A town in the middle of the country, in a state known for lakes and long, cold winters, that is nonetheless one of the grooviest places on Earth, home of Prince, Morris Day and the Time and a thriving hip hop scene. Something's gotta get you through the snow, I guess, and I'd rather be shakin' than shivering. Prof is a mainstay of that hip hop scene and tonight his carnival of Gemini-city rappers parks the bus at the Arcata Theatre Lounge at 7 p.m. Join Tae Supreme and Willie Wonka as they show the West Coast what the Gopher State has going for it in the groove department ($23).

Friday

Everyone's favorite local funk band Object Heavy is playing a free gig at the Blue Lake Casino tonight at 9 p.m., in honor of the joint's 20th anniversary. Come join Swislow and company as they rock the casbah in the midst of the bright lights and promises. Good times.

Saturday

Well, it's one of Arcata's big days of the year. And even though Oysterfest isn't happening on the plaza, you can still expect the celebration to spill over that way, much to the ire of some of my friends in the service industry. One place in that vicinity that's putting on a free show is the Jam, where, starting at 1 p.m. you can jam out with your mollusk out to the rocking sounds of E.S.P., Presently Dreaming, The Critics and Orion Jesse Paul.

If you eschew the sunny crowds, preferring darkness and loud music, two spots present themselves as viable this evening. At 7 p.m. at RampArt, Greybush is throwing an EP release party for its newest disc addition This is Punishment, with a heavy lineup featuring Wastewalker, Gurschach and Exile's Erosion. As is often tradition with fliers and social media posts about shows at RampArt, no door charge information is present, so bring a few bucks.

Nearby and two hours later at the Miniplex, one of my favorite Humco bands returns from its pandemic slumber for a sophomore show with a great lineup. Blackplate, Shively's trio of tortured psychland warriors, shares the stage with Oakland's trippy The Lodestones and backwoods darkwave act Vulture Feather ($7). I caught the 'plate's debut/reappearance last week and let me tell you, the time off has done nothing but good for these guys. What a heavy, awesome sound.

Sunday

The Siren's Song Tavern has a scorcher going on tonight. Portland and Oakland's Exulansis is an explicitly antifascist, anarcho black metal band and will be joined by Tijuana's melodic crust group Habak, as well as local black metal weirdos Nan Elmoth, thus forging a sick, sick lineup of good, rotten noise. Seven's your lucky number, as in time of the show and amount of dollars needed to get past the door.

Monday

Melbourne, Australia's CS+Kreme is an eclectic electric duo whose music stands out as creepy and beautifully compelling in an overcrowded world of plugged-in acts. I'm listening to the 2020 release Snoopy right now and giving it a rave review in real time. This is some uncannily good music. Whether the two fellas stack up live and in person is another matter, but I intend to find out this evening at 7:30 p.m. at the Miniplex ($12).

Tuesday

No Cover: Live from Savage Henry is a podcast that is taped before a live studio audience, who have, as the title suggests, paid no cover to be among the elect at the Savage Henry Comedy Club. If you'd like to join host Mark Sanders and be counted in that number, roll through around 9 p.m. Sorry, no minors.

Wednesday

Movie night! Being from the VHS rental generation of older millennials who grew up on the cult classics and violent blockbusters from that wonderful era, Paul Verhoeven has always been a hero of mine, sitting up there with John Carpenter and Joe Dante as a master of the form. Verhoeven's World War II childhood experiences with fascism and human savagery have always informed his work, which is unblinking in its gory satire of the worst impulses of government/corporate collusion. Never was this more on display than in his 1987 masterpiece Robocop, a film whose dystopian vision now seems almost quaint and hopeful in 2022 America. You can see it on the big screen at the Arcata Theatre Lounge tonight at 6 p.m. if you are feeling nostalgic for a world in which technocrats actually deliver working products and cops could be good guys ($5).

Midsummer Puzzles

By Barry Evans

fieldnotes@northcoastjournal.com

It's that time of the solstice when days start to get shorter and Journal readers get to sharpen their brains with Ye Olde Puzzle Edition. Check back in next week's issue for the answers. Let's start with an easy one:

The mistake

Can you find the mistake?

1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8 9

Pedal to the metal

A car goes 30 mph for 1 mile. How fast must it go in the next mile to average 60 mph for the entire 2-mile trip?

Four fours

This one can be savored, like a crossword. Write equations with four 4s to make the numbers 0-13, using the standard arithmetical symbols + - × ÷ √ () . and ! (where 5! = 5 × 4 × 3 × 2 × 1). Bonus for doing them in more than one way. (Remember the PEMDAS order: Parentheses, Exponents, Multiplication and Division, left to right; Addition and Subtraction, left to right.)

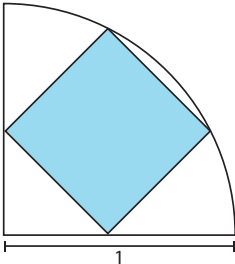

So, for instance, 18 = 44 × .4 + .4; while 100 = 4! × 4 + √4 + √4

Special Words

What's special about the words "job," "polish" and (unless you're a Brit), "herb?"

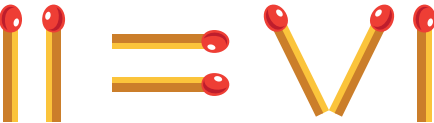

Arc-square

For geometry buffs. What's the area of the blue square if the radius of the quadrant is 1 unit?

Matches

No set of puzzles would be complete with a matchstick challenge. Move one match to make the two sides equal. I give two solutions. ●

Barry Evans (he/him, barryevans9@yahoo.com) considers the late Martin Gardner the greatest puzzler of all time.

hwma HWMA's EUREKA RECYCLING CENTER IS PERMANENTLY CLOSING

The Humboldt Waste Management Authority's Eureka Recycling Center will be permanently closing on August 1, 2022. HWMA staff will be identifying suitable sites for relocation, and it is anticipated that these services will return in early 2023.

We understand this closure may cause complications and hardships to our customers and only exacerbates the difficulty with disposing of certain hard to recycle items, but we encourage customers to utilize the below alternate disposal locations during this time.

This closure will allow HWMA and Humboldt County Jurisdictions to work toward SB 1383 compliance by utilizing this vacated space to conduct organics collection and processing activities.

For questions or concerns please email operations@hwma.net or call 707-268-8680.

For more info about SB1383 and its requirements visit <https://calrecycle.ca.gov/organics/slcp/education/>

Better Than the Real Thing

The Valet and Spiderhead

By John J. Bennett

screens@northcoastjournal.com

You want us to “go back to normal?” Congratulations, I’m back to normal.

The Valet

Not for nothing, I haven’t been to the theater in a while. It seemed like springtime had us on a roll, both in terms of plague abatement and promising new movie releases. But the complex network of circumstance — viral, political, artistic and financial — that lately serves to harsh the collective mellow has now reached an apparent state of stasis: international resting bored face.

The dinosaurs, literal and figurative, have been trotted back out (though Top Gun: Maverick had me gleefully eating crow) and it just doesn’t feel exciting. Baz Luhrmann’s Elvis looms, brightly colored and tone-deaf as can be. Dr. Strange in the Corridor of the What-Have-You (did I get that right?) is still rattling around. Lightyear is likely better than suspect but I’ll probably never know.

After years of resurgent hope for the state of cinema art and the movie industry at large, when mid-budget experiments, genre pictures and workmanlike entertainments seemed to be regaining their footing, we’ve been left with precious little to show for all the would-be progress.

Admittedly, this is a transitional time and the powers that be have yet to crack the code of their own new distribution model(s). Netflix’s status as the 800-pound gorilla of the streaming space has come into question and the rest of them, primarily controlled by studios, in turn controlled by tech and telecom conglomerates, have backpedaled from their deep-pandemic home-release frenzy. And so we’re back to tent-poles and glitzy prestige pictures and pre-plague holdovers making their way to the big screen, with the rest of the “content” (shudder) relegated to assorted lower-profile platforms with little or no marketing push, often abandoned by the algorithm and lost to poorly designed user interfaces. (Can all those code-monkeys really not figure out how to adapt search engines for this?)

past weekend that, precious few years ago, would likely have been released in theaters, maybe even hundreds of them. There is, of course, a conversation to be had about the also-recent period when these movies would not have been made at all.

THE VALET. Romantic comedies used to be one of the most reliable revenue streams the movie business had going. Pour most of the budget into star power, find a tantalizing location to shoot and let the crowds pour in to not-really wonder “will they or won’t they.” They aren’t my preferred genre, but enough of them were/are clever and cute and pretty enough to spend time with. They have as ancestors some of the most smartly written movies of all time (screwball comedies), after all. And despite the continued dilution of that DNA, they’ve retained at least some vestigial charm. But focus groups of AI or whoever seem to have dictated the spiraling demise of the form. Not that they were particularly important, but their absence seems to speak to the death of something innocent.

While The Valet (a remake of the La Doublure, 2006) probably will not change anyone’s life (for better or worse), it plays with its lineage in a way that is true to the genre while subverting some of its tropes. In other words, it does the work of a true romantic comedy, in as much as it relies on romance and comedy while also shifting the conventions of relationship dynamics and hidebound ethnic standards.

Seemingly untouchable mega-star Olivia Allan (Samara Weaving), with a major premiere fast approaching, is carrying on an affair with callow, married billionaire Vincent Royce (Max Greenfield). When one of their clandestine assignations blows up she flees the suite and is photographed in his proximity by the paparazzi. Fortunately for them, well-meaning but unwitting valet Antonio Flores (Eugenio Derbez) gets caught in the frame. And so a plot is devised to present Antonio and Olivia as a couple, thereby defusing any potentially damaging (true) rumors.

What follows is a light, almost treacly examination of love and loneliness that, with jokes as well as respect for Los Angeles’ ethnic mix (much of the dialogue is in Spanish, some in Korean, with subtitles), maintains a balance of breeziness and honesty little seen in contemporary comedy. Derbez creates an ingenious Chaplin-like stillness in space and Weaving continues a streak of highly individual, wildly varied performances. PG13. 124M. HULU.

SPIDERHEAD, while another sort of mid-level entertainment altogether, is another example of the kind of thing we might have once gone to see at the movies. Granted, a darkly comedic science fiction satire romance isn’t the easiest thing to put on a movie poster, but this one gleams with star power and boasts two of the few name-brand screenwriters in the business and the director of the highest-grossing movie of the year — even if it is based on a George Saunders short story.

Adapted by Rhett Reese and Paul Wernick (impressive CVs) and helmed by Joseph Kosinski, Spiderhead has Miles Teller and Jurnee Smollett as voluntary inmates of a prison/research facility overseen by a handsome, convivial weirdo (Chris Hemsworth). They are subjected to daily experimental drug treatments aimed at manipulating their most powerful emotions while reckoning with the residue of the crimes that brought them together.

While the narrative gets a little soft and loose toward the end, the movie is overall, as my wife put it shortly after the opening frames, “pretty captivating.” R. 106M. NETFLIX. ●

NOTICE OF PETITION TO ADMINISTER ESTATE OF Gayle E. Forster, also known as Gayle Elizabeth Forster CASE NO. PR2200168

To all heirs, beneficiaries, creditors, contingent creditors and persons who may otherwise be interested in the will or estate, or both, of Gayle E. Forster, also known as Gayle Elizabeth Forster

A PETITION FOR PROBATE has been filed by Petitioner, Shane Dennis Forster In the Superior Court of California, County of Humboldt. The petition for probate requests that Shane Dennis Forster be appointed as personal representative to administer the estate of the decedent.

THE PETITION requests authority to administer the estate under the Independent Administration of Estates Act. (This authority will allow the personal representative to take many actions without obtaining court approval. Before taking certain very important actions, however, the personal representative will be required to give notice to interested persons unless they have waived notice or consented to the proposed action.) The independent administration authority will be granted unless an interested person files an objection to the petition and shows good cause why the court should not grant the authority.

A HEARING on the petition will be held on July 21, 2022 at 1:30 p.m. at the Superior Court of California, County of Humboldt, 825 Fifth Street, Eureka, in Dept.: 6. For information on how to appear remotely for your hearing, please visit <https://www.humboldt.courts.ca.gov/>

IF YOU OBJECT to the granting of the petition, you should appear at the hearing and state your objections or file written objections with the court before the hearing. Your appearance may be in person or by your attorney.

IF YOU ARE A CREDITOR or a contingent creditor of the decedent, you must file your claim with the court and mail a copy to the personal representative appointed by the court within the later of either (1) four months from the date of first issuance of letters to a general personal representative, as defined in section 58(b) of the California Probate Code, or (2) 60 days from the date of mailing or personal delivery to you of a notice under section 9052 of the California Probate Code. Other California statutes and legal authority may affect your rights as a creditor. You may want to consult with an attorney knowledgeable in California law.

YOU MAY EXAMINE the file kept by the court. If you are a person interested in the estate, you may file with the court a Request for Special Notice (form DE-154) of the filing of an inventory and appraisal of estate assets or of any petition or account as provided in Probate Code section 1250. A Request for

A.P.N.: 107-145-014-000 The undersigned Trustee disclaims any liability for any incorrectness of the street address or other common designation, if any, shown above. If no street address or other common designation is shown, directions to the location of the property may be obtained by sending a written request to the beneficiary within 10 days of the date of first publication of this Notice of Sale. Notice to potential bidders: If you are considering bidding on this property lien, you should understand that there are risks involved in bidding at a trustee auction. You will be bidding on a lien, not on the property itself. Placing the highest bid at a trustee auction does not automatically entitle you to free and clear ownership of the property. You should also be aware that the lien being auctioned off may be a junior lien. If you are the highest bidder at the auction, you are or may be responsible for paying off all liens senior to the lien being auctioned off, before you can receive clear title to the property. You are encouraged to investigate the existence, priority, and size of outstanding liens that may exist on this property by contacting the county recorder's office or a title insurance company, either of which may charge you a fee for this information. If you consult either of these resources, you should be aware that the same lender may hold more than one mortgage or deed of trust on the property. Notice to property owner: The sale date shown on this notice of sale may be postponed one or more times by the mortgagee, beneficiary, trustee, or a court, pursuant to Section 2924g of the California Civil Code. The law requires that information about trustee sale postponements be made available to you and to the public, as a courtesy to those not present at the sale. If you wish to learn whether your sale date has been postponed, and, if applicable, the rescheduled time and date for the sale of this property, you may visit the Internet Web site address listed below for information regarding the sale of this property, using the file number assigned to this case file number. Information about postponements that are very short in duration or that occur close in time to the scheduled sale may not immediately be reflected in the telephone information or on the Internet Web site. The best way to verify postponement information is to attend the scheduled sale. Date: June 9, 2022 WT Capital Lender Services, a California corporation 7522 North Colonial Avenue,

The best way to verify postponement information is to attend the scheduled sale." For sales conducted after January 1, 2021: NOTICE TO TENANT: You may have a right to purchase this property after the trustee auction pursuant to Section 2924m of the California Civil Code. If you are an "eligible tenant buyer," you can purchase the property if you match the last and highest bid placed at the trustee auction. If you are an "eligible bidder," you may be able to purchase the property if you exceed the last and highest bid placed at the trustee auction. There are three steps to exercising this right of purchase. First, 48 hours after the date of the trustee sale, you can call (844) 477-7869, or visit this internet website www.STOXPOSTING.com, using the file number assigned to this case 85828 to find the date on which the trustee's sale was held, the amount of the last and highest bid, and the address of the trustee. Second, you must send a written notice of intent to place a bid so that the trustee receives it no more than 15 days after the trustee's sale. Third, you must submit a bid; by remitting the funds and affidavit described in Section 2924m(c) of the Civil Code; so that the trustee receives it no more than 45 days after the trustee's sale. If you think you may qualify as an "eligible tenant buyer" or "eligible bidder," you should consider contacting an attorney or appropriate real estate professional immediately for advice regarding this potential right to purchase.

CALIFORNIA PUBLIC UTILITIES COMMISSION

NOTICE TO ADOPT AN INITIAL STUDY/MITIGATED NEGATIVE DECLARATION/ENVIRONMENTAL ASSESSMENT FOR THE KLAMATH RIVER RURAL BROADBAND INITIATIVE PROJECT

Notice is hereby given that the California Public Utilities Commission (CPUC) has released a Notice of Intent (NOI) to adopt an Initial Study/Mitigated Negative Declaration for the Kamath River Rural Broadband Project (Project), located in rural Humboldt County. The CPUC has prepared a joint Initial Study/Mitigated Negative Declaration/Environmental Assessment (IS/MND/EA) that meets the California Environmental Quality Act (CEQA) and National Environmental Policy Act (NEPA). The Bureau of Indian Affairs (BIA) is serving as the federal lead agency for the purposes of NEPA. The proposed Project would comprise installation of a “middle-mile” fiber optic network as well as “last- mile” wireless broadband networks to provide high-speed internet access to first responder agencies, anchor institutions, households and businesses in the towns of Orick, Orleans, Johnsons, Wautec, Weitchpec that are currently unserved or underserved with internet access. The proposed Project would extend 104 miles and consists of above-ground and underground installation of fiber optic cables, a wireless tower in the town of Orick, a signal connection in Orleans, and placement of “last-mile” fiber cable and associated structures. The IS/MND/EA evaluates potential direct, indirect, and cumulative impacts of the construction, operation, and maintenance of the proposed Project. The public review and comment period begins on June 24, 2022 and ends July 25, 2022 The Final IS/MND/EA will incorporate written input received during the 30-day public comment period. The Draft IS/MND/EA is available for public review by request at the McKinleyville Library: 1606 Pickett Rd. in McKinleyville. The Draft IS/MND/EA may also be viewed online on the CPUC’s website for the Project at: <https://ia.cpuc.ca.gov/environment/info/esa/klamath/index.html>. The Project’s website provides access to public documents and information pertaining to the environmental review process for the proposed Project. Comments may be submitted in writing by mail to: CPUC, c/o ESA, attn. Maria Hensel/Klamath 1425 North McDowell Blvd., Suite 200, Petaluma, CA 94954; or by email to KlamathBroadbandCEQA@esassoc.com

Redwood Region Climate and Community Resilience Hub (CORE) Coordinator

JOB DESCRIPTION

Location: Bayside, CA

Team: Strategy, Program, & Community Solutions

Reports To: Executive in Residence CORE

Time Base: 40 hours per week

Hours: 8:30am-5:00pm, including occasional evening and weekend work as needed

Status: Regular Non-exempt

Wage Range: $17.00-$19.00/hour upon hire depending on experience, plus health benefits, retirement benefits, paid holidays and sick time; $21.25/hour expected at 1 year of tenure

Job Description

Redwood Region Climate and Community Resilience Hub (CORE) is a new cross-cultural, community-engaged organization dedicated to solving the climate emergency by working urgently to decarbonize and build resiliency in both natural and human-made systems throughout the Redwood Region. The CORE Coordinator is responsible for prioritizing dynamic workloads, providing excellent customer service, proposing solutions, communicating effectively, and working collaboratively across the organization. The ideal candidate will carry out job duties with an emphasis on attention to detail, cultural humility, respect for sensitive information and confidentiality, and have an ability to complete tasks with minimal oversight and a high level of independence. This position is a full participant in working with the CORE Team to fulfill HAF's mission to "promote and encourage generosity, leadership, and inclusion to strengthen our communities," and to practice organizational values of community, empathy, and equity.

Essential Functions include

- Work closely with and across the CORE team to coordinate meetings, including scheduling and logistics, preparing materials and resources, setting up appropriate technology, and providing follow up with documentation of activities, notes, and agreements. Follow through on deadlines and deliverables.
- Coordinate calendars of project staff and schedules of several regularly scheduled project meetings. Support the strategy and engagement planning and coordinate internal and external meetings.
- Work closely with the others within the organization to organize and capture strategy materials.
- Coordinate with Marketing Team to identify, develop and implement website updates; independently maintaining technical and media guides.
- Outreach for community events in coordination with the Marketing and Philanthropic Advancement Teams: manage the contacts database, coordinate mailing lists and distribute invitations through multiple communication channels including social media and email campaigns.

Application procedures can be found at www.hafoundation.org/jobs along with a detailed job description with minimum and preferred qualifications. For questions, contact Haley Clark at jobs@hafoundation.org or call (707) 442-2993, ext. 376.

Application deadline: This position will remain open until filled, however, priority consideration will be given to those who apply by 8 a.m. on Monday, July 18th.
